Whole World is Watching

**This is my first Harry Potter story in a very long time so any feedback is welcome. I am writing this as I go (but I do have a clear idea of where the story will be going, so don't worry about that). I will try to update at least once a week, if not twice. Of course, I do not own any of the Potter characters (only the ones I've created such as many of the children). Mostly everything follows the "19 Years Later" logic from Deathly Hallows in deaths and marriages other than Severus' death and Harry's marriage to Ginny of course (and Neville and Luna are married in this instead). The story starts 15 years after the war, and Severus and Harry's oldest children are starting their first year at Hogwarts. This story will be a full year, ending with them starting their second year. Enjoy!

"Ahhhhhhhhh!"

Emerald eyes looked up from the box currently being unpacked to find three kids running through the back door from outside, around the dining table, and through the kitchen door to the living room. Smiling, Harry Potter returned his attention back to the box. They had moved in a week ago and were still unpacking. There was just so much that needed to be done after moving to a new home, setting up a new apocraphy shop, and getting two kids ready for their first year at Hogwarts.

"Hey, have you seen Kitty's unicorn?" Severus Snape asked as he walked into the kitchen, carrying one of their three year old triplets who seemed to have been crying her eyes out just moments ago.

Harry looked over at his husband of the last thirteen years and shook his head. "She just had it this morning," Harry reached for his daughter, "Now what's wrong, sweetie?"

"Issiah accidentally tripped her, she's fine." Severus replied, grabbing a juice box from the fridge.

Harry frowned, "Did she hit her head?"

"She's fine." Severus said, rolling his eyes.

The older man handed his daughter the now open juice box before picking her up and setting on her feet on the floor. With juice box in hand she made a run for the living room where her brothers and sisters were playing. Harry watched her go before turning to his husband.

"Unicorn?" Severus asked again.

"She had it this morning, if she's misplaced it she'll find it." Harry replied, handing Severus two envelopes. "These came this morning."

Severus looked down at the envelopes and took a deep breath. One was addressed to each of their now eleven year old twins - Sebastian and Vivian. Their Hogwarts letters. They had just over a week before the school year began but it had been a hard decision for the family to return to England and allow their children to even attend Hogwarts. When they had first had the discussion just three months earlier, Severus had insisted he would home school the children while Harry stated they would be going to a proper school - but at the time that was the American school, the Salem Institute, after all they had been living in Atlanta, Georgia for the last thirteen years.

It had been the twins that had made the final decision for the family to return to England for them to attend Hogwarts. They had heard all the stories from their fathers about their school years and loved the idea of attending the same school they had. Severus and Harry were not too sure at first but when they had talked to all their children - at least the older ones that would really understand the meaning of the move - they had all agreed that it was the best thing for all of them.

Severus grabbed Harry and pulled him into a hug, wrapping his long arms around the shorter man's shoulders. Harry smiled and wrapped his own arms around his husband. After the war had ended Harry finally had had time to really reflect and think about his life. He had been crushing on his then Potions professor since fifth year but he thought he had lost the man before he could even utter a word. When Harry had learned Severus survived Nagini's attack, he wasted no time going to the older man and telling him his feelings, unafraid that Severus would laugh at him. The complete opposite had happened however and Severus had kissed him.

After clearing Severus' name the pair had left England just to get away for a spell, while getting to know each other on a personal and intimate level. They just never returned until now. They wanted to be somewhere nobody would really know their names, or care for their names. America had kept well away from the war and all its misgivings so they had settled into New York. Two years later they had married and for a honeymoon traveled around America. When they had reached Atlanta, Georgia Harry had fallen in love and they stayed.

"Okay." Harry pulled away from his husband, "Why don't you go and see what they're doing as it's too quiet now and I will finish unpacking in here."

"Even after fifteen years, I still don't understand why you don't use magic for mundane task as such." Severus looked around the kitchen full of boxes.

It had been the last room to be unpacked since they had moved in, as they worried first of the bedrooms and main living areas.

"I like organizing things by hand, thank you very much."

Severus grunted before heading into the living room to check on their children. His husband had been right, they were way too quiet to not be getting into something they should not be. He found the triplets coloring on the coffee table... without paper. Stepping up behind the girls he cleared his throat. Hadley and Kenna looked up at him with a giggle and a smile before climbing to their feet and running off towards the stairs. Their twin brother Jaxon right behind them. Pulling out his wand from his holster on his arm, Severus quickly cleared the not so artistic scribbles of the triplets' handiwork before turning and following them upstairs.

Vivian was helping her little sister search for the stuffed unicorn. Something Severus had hoped Nikita would've grown out of already. She was six going on seven, and it was a vice from when she was baby. As long as she had it, she didn't cry or fuss for anything. It had originally been Vivian's but the day her little sister had been brought home, Vee had given her the unicorn. They had hoped Kitty would've maybe done the same when Hadley and Kenna had been brought home with no such luck.

Continuing down the hall, Severus stopped in front of the boys' room. Sebastian, Vivian's twin, was sitting on his bed reading Quidditch Through the Ages. Issiah, their ten year old, was sitting at the desk, working on some sort of experiment with harmless potion ingredients, while Jaxon was running around in circles in the middle of the room.

"Issy, take that stuff to the lab. You know you're not suppose to experiment outside of the lab, if you're dad finds out we're both in trouble."

"Okay Papa." Issiah grabbed his ingredients and ran past Severus so fast the older man was sure the kid was going to fall and spill something that he wouldn't be able to clean up, even with magic.

Crossing the hall to the final child's room, Severus opened the door to find his youngest standing up in his crib and smiling at him. Little Ezra was only seven months old but was already figuring out how to escape his crib at night. There were many times Severus had been woken to the child tugging at the covers, trying to climb onto their bed in the middle of the night.

"You're suppose to be taking a nap." Severus huffed as he walked across the room to the crib and picked up his son.

When he and Harry had decided to start a family, they had no idea they were going to end up with eight children. After they had the twins, and the a year later Issiah, they had talked about having one more child and stopping. That way they had four children. They had been lucky and ended up with two boys and two girls when Nikita had been born.

Then they had learned Harry was pregnant for the fifth time just after Nikita's third birthday. They were in even more shock when they discovered they were having triplets. By the time the triplets were born they had two 8 year old's, a 7 year old, and a 3 going on 4 year old. It had been a huge adjustment going from four to seven children but Severus and Harry would never change their lives for anything in the world.

They didn't learn of Harry's pregnancy with little Ezra until a health scare that landed Harry in the hospital. Running an apocraphy together, they were around a lot of toxic ingredients if not handled and sealed away correctly and one day Harry had been feeling horrible. Severus had told him to go home for the day but being the stubborn man that he was, Harry refused. Only an hour later Harry had fainted and Severus had taken him to the American Wizarding hospital. That night they learned of Harry's pregnancy.

After Ezra, the couple had sat down and talked long into the night about not wanting anymore children. There was a potion that Severus had created years ago for a customer who wished to not have children, a sort of potion that would cause the consumer to become sterile, or infertile. Both Severus and Harry had agreed and taken the potion a week later. Of course if they ever decided they wanted another child, Severus also created a potion that would reverse that decision. Though Severus was pretty sure they were finish with having children as he was already into his fifties and due to the much higher risky of death to both carrier and baby of wizards over thirty five, and they were only two years away from Harry hitting that age.

Heading back downstairs with Ezra in hand, Severus stopped on the steps when his honorary nephew came running up and past him, and bright orange hair.

"Hey Uncle Sev!" Teddy Lupin ruffled Ezra's hair as he passed, heading for Sebastian's room.

Though he was four years older then Sebastian the two of them were very close. Teddy was so excited to finally have his favorite cousin (though he would never admit to that statement) was going to be at Hogwarts with him. Andromeda Tonks and little Teddy were the only ones the couple had stayed in contact with when they had moved away, after all Harry was Teddy's Godfather. Every summer Teddy had even stayed a week, or sometimes two, with them.

Entering the kitchen, Severus found Harry and Andromeda sitting at the table with cups of tea. Harry looked up and smiled when he saw his husband with their youngest child. Andromeda turned to look at him as well.

"Oh, Severus!" She exclaimed as she reached out for the baby. "Let me have that precious baby!"

Severus handed the boy over, knowing very well he was going to be smothered with kisses. Harry had stood to get a cup of tea for his husband so Severus sat down at the table with them.

"Andi was just telling me that she was going to take Teddy to get his school supplies tomorrow but thought maybe we could take him with us and the twins." Harry told Severus as he handed him the cup and sat back down. "She said she'll watch the rest of them for us."

Severus nodded, "That sounds good to me."

"Then it's settled." Andromeda stated without even looking up from making faces as Ezra and causing him to giggle. "I'll bring Teddy over after breakfast tomorrow."

"Are the two of you staying for dinner?" Severus asked, looking at Harry knowing his husband had already offered.

"Sadly no, Teddy wanted to go over to Roman's to play some game of Quidditch." Andi replied.

Severus nodded, "Tomorrow then."

Roman was the adopted son of Charlie Weasley. He had been an orphan of the war. Many wizarding families had flocked to the orphanage that was housing all the young children to taken them in. Charlie Weasley had been the one to find then seven month old Roman and had found himself attached to the little boy, adopting him immediately. It had come to a surprise to Harry and Severus when they had heard just before they left England all those years ago. Roman and Teddy had become best friends as they were in the same year at Hogwarts and had both been sorted into Hufflepuff.

"Right, we must be off then." Andi handed Ezra back to his father and stood. "We will see you tomorrow morning."

Harry smiled, "Thanks, Andi."

The older woman nodded before heading for the stairs to retrieve Teddy, and they were gone. Severus bounced Ezra on his lap and the child giggled up at his papa. Harry watched them for a moment before standing and going to the fridge to start dinner. He loved his life and how it had turned out over the years, and he wouldn't change it for anything.
